Total Expense (TER): This ratio shows the charges, levies and fees relating to the management of the portfolio and is expressed as a percentage of the average net asset value of the portfolio, calculated over the period shown and annualised to the most recently completed quarter. A higher TER does not necessarily imply a poor return, nor does a low TER imply a good return. The current TER should not be regarded as an indication of future TERs.

Transaction Costs (TC): This ratio shows the percentage of the value of the fund incurred as costs relating to the buying and selling of the fund's underlying assets. TC are a necessary cost in administering the fund and impacts fund returns. It should not be considered in isolation as returns may be impacted by many other factors over time including market returns, the type of fund, investment decisions of the investment manager and the TER.

Total Investment Charges (TIC): This ratio is simply the sum of the TER and TC, showing the percentage of the value of the fund incurred as costs relating to the investment of the fund. It should be noted that performance figures account for all costs included in the TIC ratio, so you should not deduct the TIC from performance figures, the performance is already net of the TIC.

Fund review

Record highs for global stock markets underpinned positive returns for the fund over the fourth quarter. However, the fund performance lagged relative to the MSCI All Country World index. Positive index-relative contributions within communications services (notably Alphabet), consumer discretionary (LVMH) and healthcare (Eli Lilly and Thermo Fisher) were offset by underperformance within financials (Fiserv), IT (Microsoft) and industrials (Linde). In addition, the fund's exposure to China acted as a drag as hopes for a robust economic rebound came off the boil amidst persistent weakness in the property sector.

Alphabet added the most to the portfolio return as the stock was up almost +30% and it is a top three holding. Drivers included impressive +34% year-on-year revenue growth in Q3 from Google Cloud, its upgraded AI model Gemini 3 re-establishing Alphabet as a formidable competitor in the AI race, and demand for its in-house designed AI accelerator chips (TPUs). Eli Lilly was also a meaningful contributor on the back of strong demand for its injectable diabetes and obesity drugs as well as on hopes for strong sales for the pill-versions in 2026.

Fiserv was a notable detractor. The position was cut to a small 0.7% portfolio weight ahead of Q3 corporate results to reflect our caution around near-term operational performance. We continued to hold the payments company given its low share price valuation and the prospect of an improvement in operational performance. The results missed expectations with management guiding for significant business investments to improve service and for substantial cuts to pricing. The remaining holding in Fiserv was subsequently sold as the Q3 results undermined our conviction about the stability of its earnings profile (including the previously rock-solid bank processing business) and Fiserv's ability to expand market share amidst a highly competitive industry.

Market overview

Three quarters is a long time for markets. The turmoil and pessimism precipitated by the announcement in April of egregious US trade tariffs now seem a distant memory. But at the time the implied volatility of S&P 500 options, a measure of investor fear and greed, hit levels of distress not seen since the Global Financial Crisis of 2008 and the Covid pandemic of 2020. Pan ahead to the end of the year, and the MSCI All Country World index finished comfortably up for 2025 amidst AI-enthusiasm (or "hype" for the non-believers) and the realisation the world is not on the precipice of another 1930s-type depression, let alone a mild recession. Softer than expected inflation readings, Fed interest rate cuts, easing US-China trade tensions (at least relative to the first half) and robust macro data underpinned equity market returns. The Q3 GDP print (delayed due to the US government shutdown) showed the US economy grew at an annualised pace of +4.3% (versus +3.3% expected). This was the fastest growth rate in two years, leading to investor optimism about the momentum of world's largest economy into next year.

The rally broadened out in Q4 with sectors such as healthcare, materials and financials leading the charge. Big Tech still performed well but was not the top performer, which is a welcome change given concerns about the highly concentrated nature of the equity returns in recent years.

Looking ahead

Has the sentiment pendulum swung too far from despair to euphoria? There are, as is always the case, a multitude worries to assuage or take seriously. For instance, the US trade war has not gone away. US tariffs remain at levels last seen during the 1930s. Almost as damaging, is the uncertainty surrounding the Trump Administration's erratic policy making that has held back non-AI related corporate investments. Help is on hand with the passing of the "One Big Beautiful Bill" fiscal stimulus, which is estimated by the Congressional Budget Office to increase US GDP in 2026 by +0.9%. This additional growth is a significant boost for an economy structurally growing around 2%. A key driver is that the Bill will enable businesses to immediately deduct capital expenses, such as investments in capital equipment and R&D.

This US fiscal support is one of a rarely seen policy triumvirate. The others are easing monetary policy and deregulation. These pro-cyclical boosters seldom combine when the economy is not in or coming out of a recession. The Trump Administration is pushing ahead with deregulation, and the Federal Reserve is looking to cut rates by around 50 basis points in the first half of 2026. Similarly, in Europe the ECB will keep rates low whilst Germany ramps up fiscal spending. In China the government will likely continue to ease monetary policy and push ahead with fiscal policy support.

As goes the economy, so goes corporate profits. It is atypical for rates cuts to happen as corporate earnings are growing. This suggests the current rally has some justification to it with both profit growth and the cost of money heading in opposite directions. As night follows day there will inevitably be market wobbles/concerns. But this is counterbalanced by a global economy that has shown remarkable robustness over the past five years and by adoption of transformative technology (i.e. AI). Equally, we understand the risks. As such, we remain committed to investing in a diversified portfolio of the world's best franchises that can comfortably ride through the inevitable (seasonally or cyclical) bumps in the road on the way to achieving attractive compound returns over the long-term.
