Total Expense (TER): This ratio shows the charges, levies and fees relating to the management of the portfolio and is expressed as a percentage of the average net asset value of the portfolio, calculated over the period shown and annualised to the most recently completed quarter. A higher TER does not necessarily imply a poor return, nor does a low TER imply a good return. The current TER should not be regarded as an indication of future TERs.

Transaction Costs (TC): This ratio shows the percentage of the value of the fund incurred as costs relating to the buying and selling of the fund's underlying assets. TC are a necessary cost in administering the fund and impacts fund returns. It should not be considered in isolation as returns may be impacted by many other factors over time including market returns, the type of fund, investment decisions of the investment manager and the TER.

Total Investment Charges (TIC): This ratio is simply the sum of the TER and TC, showing the percentage of the value of the fund incurred as costs relating to the investment of the fund. It should be noted that performance figures account for all costs included in the TIC ratio, so you should not deduct the TIC from performance figures, the performance is already net of the TIC.

Fund review

Over the quarter, the fund returned -6.8% compared to a benchmark return of -3.3%. The underperformance was a result of the equity component's underperformance over the period. In addition, an overweight position in equities resulted in a negative contribution from asset allocation. As markets rebounded at the end of March, we have taken some risk off the table by reducing equity.

Market overview

Following two years of strong returns from equity markets volatility set in during the first quarter of 2022 as the outlook for inflation, interest rates and global growth has deteriorated. The war in Ukraine coupled with the widespread sanctions imposed on Russia has only added to inflationary and economic growth fears as the price of natural gas and crude oil soared on supply disruption concerns. As expected, global bond yields adjusted higher, as prices fell, with investors starting to price in the reality of higher for longer inflation and a more rapid interest rate tightening cycle. At the same time corporate credit and emerging market sovereign spreads have widened to more 'realistic' levels on growth concerns, leaving yield hungry bond investors with significant losses. Global bonds have experienced their worst drawdown since 2002, falling -12% (peak to trough). That is significant given how low the starting income yields have been over the same period.

After a turbulent start to the year global equity markets gathered some composure to finish the quarter down -5% in USD terms and -2.5% in GBP, with energy the only sector to close the period in positive territory, surging over +20% as oil prices broke through $120 per barrel. Initially, equity market valuations adjusted to the change in the outlook for interest rates, but this was soon followed by fears of a possible invasion of Ukraine by Russian forces, which sadly became a reality and has resulted in one of the worst humanitarian crises in recent history.

Equity markets did however behave exactly in line with previous episodes of heightened geopolitical tension and have rebounded strongly from their lows after the initial shock and further angst around the potential long-term implications of such an event on world stability and world commodity prices. Although still very early days, history has taught us that the increase in volatility from geopolitical events tends to be short lived.

Looking ahead

Although it is impossible to predict how long the military conflict and associated sanctions will continue for, a prolonged war would likely inflict significant harm to the global economy through higher inflation, reduced real disposable income for consumers/households and lower profit margins for many companies. This of course is in addition to the dreadful human suffering and loss of life. Europe's economy which is heavily reliant on global trade and manufacturing will be directly exposed to the significant increases in energy costs and will be particularly vulnerable if Putin decides to retaliate by reducing or cutting off energy supply to the region. The latest fall in the German IFO Business Climate Index points to meaningful weakness ahead in Europe.

The cocktail of rising interest rates, elevated inflation and geopolitical uncertainty pose risks to consumer and business confidence, and ultimately the outlook for global growth. The expected growth resilience is very much dependent on households drawing down excess savings to offset the squeeze in after inflation disposable income and firms' willingness to continue filling vacancies in the face of rising uncertainty. But while risks to slower growth are mounting and should be closely monitored, global manufacturing and services leading economic indicators remain robust and are consistent with above trend growth momentum as the effects from Omicron fade.

The pace of monetary tightening and the path for inflation will play an important role in determining returns from risk assets. If history is to be repeated investors should expect lower returns in the immediate future as valuations adjust to an environment of reduced liquidity and higher discount rates (used for valuing cash flows) as central banks "will do what it takes" to fight inflation.
