Total Expense (TER): This ratio shows the charges, levies and fees relating to the management of the portfolio and is expressed as a percentage of the average net asset value of the portfolio, calculated over the period shown and annualised to the most recently completed quarter. A higher TER does not necessarily imply a poor return, nor does a low TER imply a good return. The current TER should not be regarded as an indication of future TERs.

Transaction Costs (TC): This ratio shows the percentage of the value of the fund incurred as costs relating to the buying and selling of the fund's underlying assets. TC are a necessary cost in administering the fund and impacts fund returns. It should not be considered in isolation as returns may be impacted by many other factors over time including market returns, the type of fund, investment decisions of the investment manager and the TER.

Total Investment Charges (TIC): This ratio is simply the sum of the TER and TC, showing the percentage of the value of the fund incurred as costs relating to the investment of the fund. It should be noted that performance figures account for all costs included in the TIC ratio, so you should not deduct the TIC from performance figures, the performance is already net of the TIC.

Market overview

South African Equity declined 10.6% in the second quarter of 2022, as measured by the FTSE/JSE Capped SWIX index. The second quarter was very volatile. Inflation was the real focal point during the quarter as commodity driven effects from the war in the Ukraine put pressure on central banks around the world as well as a resurgence of global supply disruptions from the shutdowns in China under the Covid zero policy.

The second quarter of 2022 was characterised by central banks around the world being forced to withdraw liquidity and tighten monetary policy as inflation, both current and expected pushed out on the back of renewed supply disruptions and strong energy prices. As such, interest rates rising faster than anticipated first sparked distant memories of stagflation in the 1970's. In addition, as inflation remained very sticky, fears rocked both equity and bond markets as markets viewed central banks, and the FED by extension would not be able to manufacture a soft landing this time around and a recession is now a distinct and real possibility in the US and the rest of the world.

As global inflation bit, South Africa did not come out unscathed. While South African equity had held up well in 2022, in June when we witnessed a large reversal of the fortunes of South African equity. The broad index was down 10% for the month of June on the back of rising inflation and rising interest rates which will have a severe impact on the fragile consumer. On top of the fragile consumer and diminishing consumption, the power utility Eskom was forced into the worst loadshedding the country has had to endure as the workforce flexed its muscles and embarked on a strike. All these have caused consumer and business confidence to crash, further delaying any potential investment led recovery for the economy.

Consequently, domestic growth in South Africa will remain below the required level to meaningfully reduce unemployment and drive sustainable growth that domestic companies require to generate optimal returns on capital for the foreseeable future. South African equity before the June selloff was trading on valuations that appeared to be attractive in the global context despite the structural economic headwinds. Post the selloff, they appear to be an even better opportunity, despite the tough economic backdrop. This may require a patient investor as equity generally struggles to re-rate in a rising interest rate environment but starting to position portfolios to benefit over the long term at current prices looks attractive.

Looking ahead

2022 has started off on a very volatile note. The FED hiking driven by rampant inflation aggravated fundamentally by the Russia/Ukraine conflict has caused a sharp selloff in growth assets. South African equities were not spared in the second quarter as inflation has become a domestic concern as well as a constrained consumer and serious power supply disruptions.

Much of the rerating of South African equities happened in 2021 and now the delivery of earnings growth is paramount. South African equity valuations appear attractive relative to history and peers and underpins our positive view on the asset class despite the risks of rising interest rates and a weak consumer. In uncertain times, diversification and risk management are of utmost importance. We remain focussed on stock selection and long-term value creation.
